In bioinformatics, microarrays are used to measure how strongly different genes are expressed in a sample of biological material. Different rates of expression of a gene are often compared by using the binary logarithm of the ratio of expression rates: the log ratio of two expression rates is defined as the binary logarithm of the ratio of the two rates.

see also Kissing number in the sphere packing problem. In chemistry, a contact number (CN) is a simple solvent exposure measure that measures residue burial in proteins. The definition of CN varies between authors, but is generally defined as the number of either C or C atoms within a sphere around the C or C atom of the residue. The radius of the sphere is typically chosen to be between 8 and ...

I have a bibtex database of optimization references (900K) available online. These are mostly interior point references. A searchable version of this bibliography is also available. I also have an unorganized list of announcements of computational packages that are available for solving a variety of problems. This page is not updated often enough, so some of the links are no longer functional.

Identical by descent (IBD) is a term used in genetic genealogy to describe a matching segment of DNA shared by two or more people that has been inherited from a common ancestor without any intervening recombination. The segments are considered to match if all the alleles on a paternal or maternal chromosome are identical (barring rare mutations and genotyping errors) and if the minimum ...

Fig. 1 shows a bird's eye view of supervised learning. Although the data in this case are labelled, unsupervised methods are extensively used in the initial stages of the analysis to explore the data (e.g. visualization of high-dimensional data sets) and extract putative discriminatory features (see section Feature Extraction). Once an appropriate feature set is determined, the observations are ...

Hexanal is an alkyl aldehyde found in human biofluids. Human milk samples collected from women contains hexanal. Among mediators of oxidative stress, highly reactive secondary aldehydic lipid peroxidation products can initiate the processes of spontaneous mutagenesis and carcinogenesis and can also act as a growth-regulating factors and signaling molecules.
